wtf!! You don't care if blackies, brownies and tiny eyes rule the world? We need to stop that. Colored people have low IQ. No offence intended, No Racism intended.

i disagree

trump's a moderate, not some extreme racist.

> uhhh what? You know what I am talking about. The inferiors are multiplying a very high rate and spreading their evil culture. We need to protect the white race from going extinct.

26 minutes ago

culture and race are different. i don't give a shit about the white race.

regarding culture, America needs to be a better melting pot to ASSIMILATE immigrants, and should try to be selective about letting in immigrants who will benefit the country and who like America, and should build a southern border wall. people of different races can learn to think rationally regardless of their skin color or genes.

America's political problems are largely self-inflicted. if Americans were wiser, things would be going better. some of the main problems are our schools and parenting traditions destroy our children's minds (it's similar or even worse in other countries). hence my efforts to spread better ideas, e.g. at <http://fallibleideas.com>

How do we prevent the white race from going Extinct?

42 minutes ago

uhhh what?

How do I be more tolerant of people who look disgusting? I judge a book by its cover a lot.

about 23 hours ago

why? try to understand yourself.

what do you value? try to find some good things to value and pay attention to those.

if you have something better to do –e.g. you're rapidly learning a lot and getting your life in order –then you'll pay more attention to that.

I think the south park animation sucks. How do I persuade myself to watch it?

about 23 hours ago

what's wrong with it? you can see what's going on. it's functional. what's the problem? is it that it doesn't show body language vividly enough and you want to stare at people? do you dislike all animated shows?

I feel "disgust" looking at people who don't take care of their appearance. Isn't Makeup one of the good things capitalism has produced?

about 23 hours ago

you should be more tolerant and stop feeling that way. you should care about people's ideas and accomplishments and other stuff that matters, and try to interact with people in important ways about important stuff.

making makeup is ok in that people want it. and it has some uses, e.g. for movie costumes. but it's super overrated. this isn't capitalism's fault, but nor has capitalism solved the problem (that isn't capitalism's job). just because it's created under capitalism doesn't mean it's wonderful – capitalism also allows for selling snake oil, homeopathy, tarot card readings, books advising people to be cruel to their children, etc

I am a Presbyterian. I don't want to be an atheist/satanist to be on FI. Can I remain religious and be rational?

short term: no problem. you can learn useful info about tons of other stuff.

long term: you don't get to decide what conclusions the pursuit of truth results in. you can't be seeking the truth in an open-minded way, trying to make unbounded progress, but also decide some conclusions at the start that you're unwilling to reconsider.

this is just like with science or games. can you try to play chess as well as possible but you don't want to use the Sicilian defense? maybe, maybe not. that isn't currently known. it could turn out that's the best defense and the others don't work as well. it'd be a bad attitude to try to be a great chess player but be unwilling to consider using some chess strategies.

PS i don't think there's ever been a satanist on FI. if you started with some conversations on other topics and found they were working well, then after that i'd recommend asking about some of your concerns about atheism – it might be different than what you think it means.

Is it second-handed to watch reactions on youtube? (Eg: Reactions to my fav tv show/movie/food) I become happy when people like the same stuff I like. ✕

yesterday

Would FI knowledge make me rich? ✕

mildly rich? sure. ez if u succeed at understanding FI thoroughly. if you're good enough at learning you can e.g. learn programming (and a bit of business, salary negotiation, etc) particularly well and make lots of money.

super rich? no promises. very few people get super rich. many who do are lucky in addition to skilled. and many who do are very popular and FI isn't about being popular. and many super rich people do immoral stuff like pursue government favors for their business instead of being productive, which FI opposes. if you want to get super rich in a good way, FI would increase your odds, it's a better approach than anything else you could try instead.

How do I persuade lefties to like Trump? ✕

which lefties and why?

if it's one friend who is a reasonable person, you could show him lots of evidence and facts and some good books (e.g. the Trump books by Ann Coulter and David Horowitz).

more broadly, i'd say don't. trying to persuade lefties to like Trump isn't a very effective, efficient way to improve the world, help others, or learn stuff yourself. you'd be much better off trying to learn more philosophy skills (like critical thinking, objectivity, integrity, curiosity) and educate people about those.

You say I should read DD before Popper. Should I read FoR before BOI? I am not that much into science. Is it okay if I skip non-philosophy parts of FoR?

7 days ago

I think FoR before BoI.

You can skip some science chapters (like quantum physics and time travel) but there are other parts which are more mixed like the chapter on evolution in FoR and the 2nd chapter of BoI which you should at least try reading.

you can skip the math/computation/AI/virtual reality stuff if you get stuck, but give them a try first. you should also try the physics (FoR ch. 2) at least briefly because it may not be what you expect.

i list some key chapters on the FI site. besides those for FoR, you should try 4-6 and 10 but don't beat yourself up too much if it's not working. For BoI, you should give most of the chapters a try and see if they click for you or not.

If I have tons of time in my hand, should I not buy your yes/no material? How many popper books do I have to read to reach there?

7 days ago

yes/no is pretty accessible, you don't have to read Popper first.

reading Popper won't teach you the same stuff as yes/no. yes/no is focused on a much smaller set of topics than Popper's overall writing. and for what it talks about, it improves on Popper and Deutsch, it's not the same.

if you don't have much money, you could get a lot of books for the same price.

recommendations: <http://fallibleideas.com/books> and my free stuff.

also i wouldn't recommend reading Popper before Deutsch.

Would a half-hearted effort at FI worse than living a conventional life? Neither here nor there life looks terrifying.

7 days ago

it depends.

my suggestion: go for it. TRY. make a try for a good life. don't just settle and cope.
Atlas Shrugged:

"Do you think that it's any better in the West?"

"No. I don't."

"Then why are you going there?"

"Because I haven't tried it before. That's all there is left to try. It's somewhere to go. Just to keep moving . . . You know," he added suddenly, "I don't think it will be any use. But there's nothing to do in the East except sit under some hedge and wait to die. I don't think I'd mind it much now, the dying. I know it would be a lot easier. Only I think that it's a sin to sit down and let your life go, without making a try for it."

Why are there self-hating jews? What do they hate about themselves?

7 days ago

i guess lots of them don't identify as jewish very much, and accept lots of anti-jewish arguments (e.g. libels about Israel murdering children that you can read in the news all the time) for the same reasons others do. nothing about being jewish makes one immune to being fooled by propaganda, dishonest arguments, old rhetoric with a history of persuading people, etc.

and jews as a group tend lefty, and the left is anti-semitic today, so lefty jews have to accept lots of anti-semitic ideas to fit in.

Why would Trump be a Nazi Supporter when his son-in-law is Jewish? Why doesn't the left understand that?

8 days ago

that's a poor argument. there are self-hating jews, let alone people who hate jewish relatives.

Why does Israel allow Muslims to live in their country? Is Israel stupid?

3 months ago

Israel is a liberal democracy just like the US, France, etc. Israelis have diverse opinions about immigration policy. I also don't think they really ever had the opportunity (or inclination) to have NO muslims, except by the sort of deportation and land theft that they never did but are often accused of.

Vaping is better than smoking. It is 10000x better. So shouldn't that make it good?

3 months ago

no. "better than eating arsenic" doesn't make something good.

you're getting basic logic wrong.

wtf is good about vaping? it doesn't help you think, learn, solve problems, or do anything else useful or important.

people say they "enjoy" it. it's "fun". but WHY? they don't know what they like about it, and thus can't evaluate their reasoning is actually good. and the reason they're at such a loss for words for what they like about vaping is b/c they can't come up with anything intellectually defensible about it to say.

Why do you believe that addiction does not exist? What evidence do you have? How many addicts have you spoken to?

4 months ago

read Szasz, search the email discussion archives and read my psychiatry essay <https://gumroad.com/l/ezayH>

Then why do you deny they exist?

4 months ago

i deny that UFO abductees exist b/c there's no such thing. that doesn't mean i hate people who claim to have been abducted by a UFO. i think they're mistaken about at least one thing.

"addicts" sometimes have big problems of some sort (sometimes not), but that doesn't make "addiction" a real thing.

Steve Bannon was extremely important. Will Trump get him back?

I think Trump will not fulfill any of his promises. What do you think? & Bannon firing was bad too.

5 months ago

you're wrong/exaggerating. judge Gorsuch, for example.

Why don't you give a Ted talk? or a Defcon talk (you seem to like defcon).

5 months ago

the purpose of doing those conventions in person is for people to socialize. i'm not interested in trying to meet and persuade people via IRL socializing/networking. i'm not very good at it, and i think it's a bad approach. i focus on truth, not charisma, and especially not non-verbal charisma at real-time speed.

online does communication better. youtube videos are better than IRL talks, e.g. because they're asynchronous (you can watch at a different time than I talk) and has pause/rewind and playback speed controls. and you can't watch from home instead of traveling.

i know they make youtube videos out of convention talks, but you can skip the convention and just make a youtube video and also optimize the video (like do video editing and put in helpful illustrations and Keynote slide images, rather than just a video of IRL. also doing multiple takes of some or all of it can help with quality but that isn't done with convention videos. these methods of improving videos are well known and commonplace in general, they just aren't done with convention talk videos because with conventions the video is secondary and tacked on).

and video isn't even the main format i use. writing is the best overall format. video has some advantages and i think it's good to make a variety of stuff, but writing is the best for clarity and precision.

i also don't respect TED and TED would not invite me.

i also don't see the point of more focus on outreach without a message that actually would persuade and reach many people. what would i say in the talk that would be effective? i have a lot of great points which people don't want to hear... i have not solved that problem.

Is receiving kidney transplant from a living donor against objectivism? The person donating is sacrificing for no benefit in return.

5 months ago

a variety of benefits for the donor are possible such as wanting their family member to be alive and healthy longer or being paid (maybe paying the donor is illegal in the US currently? i don't know. but if so it'd be that law, not the medical procedure, which clashes with Objectivism).

Is going against your feelings coercion? I procrastinated reading Rand, Popper etc because I didn't feel like reading.

why didn't you feel like it? you thought it was good in some way and bad in some way. you should resolve this conflict. sort out your problems.

What would I get by becoming a greater philosopher than Ayn Rand? Does someone need to be the greatest philosopher to be happy or rich? Don't most people get successful even by solving problems mediocrely. I also don't want to be hated a lot.. being disliked is fine but not hated. ✕ being vastly wiser would let you make much better decisions in your life about everything, and give you much better ability to solve problems you face.

of course some people get rich in other ways.

the happiness of bad thinkers is questionable, though. their lives are full of unsolved problems and evasions. and they are stuck in a lot of ways, rather than making unbounded beginning-of-infinity style progress about whatever they choose to work on.

your desire not to be hated is one of the many, many flaws you could fix if you were much wiser.

Was the rape scene necessary in Fountainhead? I am an extreme anti-feminist but I still feel it was unnecessary. Did Ayn Rand add that scene to trigger the feminists and make them understand the complexity of consent and sex? (that consent can be given non-verbally for sex) ✕ it wasn't a rape scene. rape is a violent crime. they flirted and then eventually banged. they like rough sex and roleplay.

Rand understates/underestimates the amount of verbal communication that it takes for people to understand each other well. in general, not just in this part of the book. she doesn't present a lot of minor misunderstandings getting cleared up. admittedly i think it's typical to omit those in fiction because they'd just be minor distractions (kinda like scenes where people go to the bathroom -- that's realistic but why put it in?), so that makes it harder to tell what she really thinks. but it's not purely a matter of omission, she also has comments about people judging/understanding others by their appearance and does some things to present some stuff as actually being low communication including the Roark/Dominique early phase relationship.

necessary is a strong word. i don't think it was *necessary*. i don't think the scene is a big deal which is enough to make it unnecessary.

I think Rand put the scene in because sex is part of life and she was sharing ideas about it rather than dodging the issue. I consider her comments about sex to be mixed -- I agree with some points (e.g. pro-happiness attitude), but Rand is more inclined towards traditional gender role kinda stuff than I agree with. she also made a comment against female Presidents. <https://www.google.com/search?client=safari&rls=en&q=ayn+rand+female+president> i know that i haven't studied the apollo program much. i know some philosophy relating to the government, scientific inquiry, etc. and i know some modern politics about government biases and propaganda. so i briefly said each of these. doesn't seem hard.

i know a lot about some relevant concepts (easy to be confident), but not a lot about the particular historical case (so maybe there's some details i don't know about that change the application of the concepts).

hedging doesn't help anything. i paid attention to hedges over time and put some attention into not doing them and noticing them and seeing what's bad about them and looking out for any times they were good.

Ah so there's a need to not just look at the visible tech progress but the unseen anti progress effects of govt involvement. But still that seems like a more NUANCED point than contradiction in terms

real scientific inquiry involves freedom to pursue ideas in an open-ended way, not predetermined government-overseer-set goals. you can see today how the government is largely destroying science in many areas in all countries. e.g. most environmental "science" is government propaganda.

i have no idea whether we should have gone to the moon at that particular time. i kind of doubt it on general principles because there are a great many urgent problems on Earth such as bad schools and aging. i suspect NASA misused a great deal of wealth because the government wanted a propaganda program -- which is still having an effect on you decades later.

Would you answer my question if I give you 5$? Is there a refund policy if you don't feel like answering a particular question.

8 months ago

depends on the question. i have to be interested in it or it could be super short to answer (like a yes/no question).

to actually hire my time would cost a lot more with questions that aren't super short. i charge a lot for paid work (more than $100/hr to give you some indication. i don't want to post an actual rate in public for negotiation reasons. no one ever pays more than your posted rate! and also because i try to charge for value instead of time now). so it has to mostly be something i'd do anyway.

no refunds. you could say "i will send you $5 if you answer this question" if you want and then send after. i would expect you to then pay regardless of answer quality. if you mean you will only send $5 if you *like* my answer, then say that upfront and i'll have low expectations. on Twitch people routinely lie about sending money in the future ("I will subscribe if you..."). i'm willing to assume good faith from anonymous *once*, so i recommend no one be a liar and screw it up for everyone!

they could have posted self-contained questions, instead of information about Tomi Lahren with zero reference to any question about him or reason for posting it. don't make questions depend in an unstated way on something written elsewhere, such as in a prior question.

also i'd already answered. i don't know about him. that actually answered the original question about what i think (answer = i don't know). so the prior question was already addressed. if i actually wanted to know who Tomi is I would have googled. i was providing the information that i have no answer.

I have started ripping minds apart cargo-culting you. People cry when I crit them and even say suicidal things. Should I stop? Should I not call people broken and list a hundred bad things about them when they come to me for help.

8 months ago

you could run some of your criticism by FI. maybe you're mistaken. maybe you're mean. i don't know.

you should learn more philosophy so your criticism can be more accurate and helpful. get more skilled before giving out tons of advice, especially since it's being poorly received!

did these people ask for criticism? i usually criticize the ideas of people who ask for it by coming to my forums, or public figures like authors.

you did say they came to you for help. maybe they didn't know what kind of help you offered though. maybe there's a miscommunication there. i try to be pretty clear about what sort of place FI is but people still have incorrect expectations sometimes.

getting people to cry openly and even say suicidal things out loud (usually people hide those even if they think it) sounds quite extreme and is a big warning sign to pause and reconsider and do more learning.

8 months ago

use quotes that end ("here is a quote") b/c questions here don't have paragraph breaks to show where the quote ends. you don't seem like a conceptual thinker. you're just mindlessly copying an FI style where it doesn't work without thinking about why it's used and how it functions to indicate which text is and isn't quoted and how that isn't working here.

and make questions self-contained. you didn't ask a question here, at all.

the United States for example. if you don't pay your taxes, the "authorities" use a sequence of escalating measures to force you to pay, which includes potentially escalating to sending armed men to arrest you who will use guns if necessary. if you had a bunch of armed bodyguards or something so more than a couple cops were necessary, then the government could use a SWAT team or FBI raid team or whatever (trained armed gun fights).

in the US, most people over age 30 are poor b/c they are immoral. they could have become non-poor if they were better people.

you don't have to feel fear to budget money for healthcare. you can be logically aware of the value of healthcare, the possibility of illness, etc.

your comments here are just nonsense. you're arguing with some kinda strawman that has nothing to do with my views and which you don't explain. you've got some kinda background context with some concepts about fear and caring that you haven't explained at all and they are wrong and have nothing to do with me.

it's static memes, and bad parenting is the #1 issue there, but is not solely responsible. non-parents do a lot. that includes teachers, peers, TV, uncles, many sources of information about our culture.

consider peers. suppose Billy's parents are much better than average and he's like 4 years old. his parents haven't told him some typical bad ideas. but his 4 year old friends have been treated worse and know more bad ideas than Billy, and tell him.

9 months ago

PUA helps paying adult clients and seeks repeat customers.

PUA doesn't pressure and mind-fuck people about this stuff like parents/schools/our-culture.

PUA provides honest information about how our culture works. This honesty clashes with our culture and so lots of people dislike PUA. PUA's honesty makes it harm, rather than help, the spread of the static memes involved.

sure. US President. Apple CEO. writing a column and best sellers which say what you want to say (rather than compromising to appease your audience as is common), like Ann Coulter does.

broadly, knowledge work is good, and manual labor is bad. being a programmer minimizes manual labor. lots of knowledge workers -- e.g. laboratory scientists -- end up doing some manual labor like washing vials out or moving stuff from one table to another table or measuring the right amount of a chemical. limited amounts of manual labor like that are ok (just like the labor of typing is ok). some jobs have too much and some don't.

Did you delete your prev questions?

9 months ago

no

My question is, what practical help do you think can be given to Joe and people like him? My other question is, how will Mr. Szas's books help him?

9 months ago

his problem is bad ideas. books share good ideas.

as for practical help, e.g. one of his friends could give him a couch to sleep on, some tea, and use of a shower.

Joe doesn't need, or want, libraries of text books. What he needs, and wants when he can think straight, is practical help. He can't pay you, he has no money. Force as a government agent? Eh? I didn't ask about that (unless you're the secret police).

9 months ago

Szasz's books are not text books and you don't seem to have a question here.

As a private citizen, what will I do for Joe? Is that your question? You don't state it. My answer to that: write essays he may not read. You can call my answer "nothing" if you want to. I don't know Joe and I have other things to do.

Example: Joe is hooked on heroin. Because of his addiction, he has lost his marriage, his home and his job. He now lives on the streets and survives by begging and soup kitchens. Any money goes to his dealer for another fix. What would you do for him?

why would i do something for him? is he asking for anything?

one thing i'd like someone to do for him –but not me personally, i have other interests – is run a *cheap* *for profit* rehab center for voluntary self-paying clients only. lots of rehab centers are either charities or oriented towards wealthy people. but there's really no reason they can't be cheap plus for-profit. and if you get it both cheap and effective enough, you can offer payment plans on the basis that you actually help people enough they end up paying you back.

there is other help available to Joe. e.g. we have libraries where he can read the books of Thomas Szasz. but i'm guessing he doesn't want to. and your question is really about what i'm willing to do TO Joe, by force, as a powerful government agent, rather than what i'll do FOR him.

Your solution to the drugs problem. (I thought that's what we were talking about). Freedom good, force bad ... absolutely. I wasn't arguing, you brought it up. So what do you think should be done to help people addicted to drugs, alcohol, etc?

10 months ago

i have no idea what "the drugs problem" is.

some people have problems in their lives. some of those problems involve drugs in some partial way.

as usual, they should help themselves. this includes requesting and paying for help from others. it doesn't include the government.

you can help individuals you know, if they want your help, and you want to give it.

if you have a particular question about how to help people in some situation, you'll have to be more specific. drug use varies lots. as a generic answer i'd say get them some Thomas Szasz books.

You brought up taking money by force. So what would be your solution?

10 months ago

solution to what? freedom is good. force is bad. get over it.

Taking your money against your will is exactly what will happen because the addicts will need it to buy their fix. Who else do you think is going to? And what would your solution be?

10 months ago

it sounds like you assume all drug users are criminal thieves. that's prejudiced and doesn't fit the facts. and it doesn't fit the "innocent until proven guilty" approach to crime.

you've also changed the subject from taking money via taxes to taking money via burglary. i think you're just throwing ad hoc arguments at me in a one-sided way.

So it's ok for people to get hooked on drugs etc but not ok to help them to recover? You'd be ok with albies and druggies in the streets and all the problems that would follow?

10 months ago

i'm not ok with INITIATION OF FORCE. i am ok with freedom, including the freedom to shoot yourself in the foot, commit suicide, or ruin your life. but if you ruin your life, you don't get to take my money, against my will, to try to fix your problems.

i didn't say anything about letting people live on the street and commit petty crime. i'm in favor of law enforcement.

Should recreational drugs be decriminalised and the money previously used for enforcement put towards treatment and rehabilitation?

i don't agree with everything here like the $15 per ton of landfill tax. but think about that. they are saying they calculated the harm of landfill, in terms of environmentalism, at an extra $15 per 2000 lbs above what getting rid of garbage currently costs. if we accept their number ... it's tiny. not worth the human effort to recycle. individuals doing recycling would save far far less than minimum wage. there's so many better things to spend your time on than making the effort to recycle 5 lbs of stuff today for 3.75 cents.

Re: your biggest unsolved problem being that you want a peer (or above you) to discuss ideas with. What would someone need to be like to count as a peer?

loosely: for every 100 things i teach them, a peer should be able to teach me 20-500 things. (500 means i taught them 20% as much as they taught me. more or less than this range and there's a big skill gap) they should know tons of great stuff i know (like what's in many of the most important books), instead of being way way behind. they should be able to teach me stuff, win arguments with me (loosely, peer is someone where each of u are winning at least 20% of the arguments).

they should be able to contribute to progress, instead of just trying to catch up to what i already know.

I'm guessing you mean with ideal laws with no loopholes.

I don't know if by "coercion" you mean force or TCS-coercion. (What is TCS-coercion? This: <http://fallibleideas.com/coercion> )

If you mean force, no you shouldn't force people who aren't doing anything wrong. No you shouldn't initiate lawbreaking.

If you mean TCS-coercion, then it depends how you assign responsibility. If I decline someone's offer, they might get TCS-coerced.

re trans stuff, what about kids who identify as the other gender? do you think that is about sex? or is it something different than adults who are trans?

over 1 year ago

if kid is pretty young, then that's usually about bad parents, bad culture.

parents do stuff like: not let kid have the haircut, toys, dress they want.

then if kid fights with parent over it (common), a lot (somewhat less common), certain parents will think like "well if kid is trans, then they can have the stuff they want" and offer that as the one way to get it.

they'll read trans propaganda/advocacy and find it appealing and get drawn into that stuff.

some parents like the LGBT community, like being involved in something progressive like trans, etc. or have the background ideas so once they find out about it, they'll like it.

one of the awful things here (applies to trans people in general, and e.g. homosexuals too, but especially awful here) is the pressure not to change back.

it takes time and effort to learn PUA stuff. it's ok, it works. but if you want sex with another person: just have it with a guy. no bullshit. save time. put your creativity into more worthwhile projects than getting a female. if you prefer females - change your preferences. Thoughts?

Well, which female candidate is actually good?

I admit Hillary is no worse than Obama(a man). But she's an awful candidate.

I'd vote for Ann Coulter for president in a heartbeat. I don't mind female presidents. I never agreed with Rand about that. Yes a larger percentage of the male population would make a decent president – men more often have the right traits. But that doesn't matter. The people running for president are not a random sample, they are self-selected unusual people.

Suppose you are trying to implement the idea of getting good at something or finding a path to mastery. What criteria should you use to pick what to focus on? Are there any things you should exclude outright?

over 1 year ago

try to criticize your choice. there isn't a list of possible criticisms. you need to think creatively, and you should also get criticism from others. but there's some common issues i can mention:

choose something you'll actually do. don't just pick the "most rational" thing you aren't interested in, then never do it. you'll probably need to pick something you already are interested in, or find it really natural to get interested in just for fun.

consider if your interest has enough depth. like Tic Tac Toe is too easy. you can learn the whole thing pretty fast and finish. it's fine to learn Tic Tac Toe if you want, but you should be prepared to move on. (either to new interests, or stuff like mathematically solving Tic Tac Toe with any size board and possibly some other rule changes). the point is, for this mastery purpose, you want something where you can keep developing your skill and keep increasing it and getting better and better, so it needs to be a big thing with a lot of stuff to learn to keep improving.

look at whether other people do your interest and talk about it. you could do something alone if you really wanted, but there's some major downsides. if your interest is popular, there's gonna be books to teach it to you, and people will answer questions on online forums, that can be really helpful. if you try to go it alone, it can be really hard to tell if you're doing a good job. if there's other people who are better at it than you, you can compare what you're doing to them and learn about ways you're doing it wrong that you wouldn't have noticed otherwise. and if you get stuck, you can ask someone who already solved that issue for a tip.

does your interest lead into other interests well? if it has some connections to politics, starting your own business, math, chemistry, physics, programming or writing, or other great BIG stuff, that's good. it can help you approach those things and one day transition into doing some of them too.

PUA has GENUINE ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE about some social issues where quality, detailed, precise RATIONAL knowledge is rare. They act like scientists in a field where other people don't.

Why do you think there aren't more women in politics? Do you think people pay more attention to female politicians than male ones?
Thank you for your answer. Lucas

over 1 year ago

I agree there is substantial audience bias. There's also a bump for being female in politics, because it's trendy. But overall audience perceptions are worse for women –and the feminist bump would go away if politics was 50% female.

But that's not the main issue. The main issue is that that audience perception actually has some truth to it.

Fewer women want to do hard things in life, deal with especially challenging and risky careers, or think a lot. Fewer women want to be politicians. Fewer women want to be dragged through the mud (if they ever get high enough to be noticed!). Then, even if you do a great job for 20 years, you could at any moment get pushed out of politics over some stupid incident, like an unguarded comment picked up by a mic that gets taken out of context and misunderstood. Politics is pretty harsh and tough and competitive, and the median outcome of a political career isn't great – you aim high but most people don't make it. (Women more often prefer career paths where most people get a pretty good outcome, with less extreme results either upward or downward.)

So, why are women worse people? Are they oppressed by the patriarchy? No. Short answer: because our culture and static memes make women one way, and men another way (lots of overlap, some differences) and the male way happens to be better overall (what? did you expect them to just randomly be exactly equal?).

Who teaches women (and men!) to be the way they are? #1 answer: their mothers. Mothers have the biggest role in raising children.

Suppose you are having a consistent thinking problem where in certain situations you find yourself very attached to certain assumptions which may not be very warranted, and you find it very hard to think "outside the box" of those assumptions. Is there a general strat for fixing this?

over 1 year ago

If you learn some really unconventional and extreme ideas, which you initially disagree with, that could help. It could be good practice. Like learn capitalism, liberalism, reason, critical thinking and problem solving. Those are completely outside the box for our culture, so they could expand your mind.

The more general strategy is just to learn the proper methods of thinking – from Objectivism, Critical Rationalism and Fallible Ideas.

If you were REALLY confident, totally secure in your frame, and totally seeking the BEST in ALL things ... you wouldn't be scared of a (mentally, morally) strong woman in the slightest, you'd be thrilled.

You still wouldn't pedestal her though. You wouldn't try to win her over primarily with compliments. You wouldn't say how far above you she is. You'd still be looking to have and offer value yourself, and expecting her to appreciate it, like normal. A particularly great woman would be particularly suited to appreciate value that isn't conventionally appreciated much (e.g. skill at Objectivism), so that'd be awesome.

When they cannot persuade Joe to help voluntarily – Joe thinks something else is a better use of Joe's money – then they shouldn't pull out a gun (or the equivalent like the government sending firm letters to pay up, backed up by guns if necessary).

Not necesarrily knowledge. Just some sort of value. What fundamental value does a baby have? Why do they get rights for having no value? Or do we all just have to give them handouts no matter how we feel about it?

over 1 year ago

A baby is a person –a universal knowledge creator. He can think, like you.

The exact point of development to a thinking person, or transition period, is not known. To be on the safe side, no killing babies!!

Note: children must start learning well before you see results such as language and motor skills. Learning precedes successful results. I think by quite a bit of time. (And learning to understand some language precedes speaking any words, again by quite a bit.)

Because someone who has finished high school and is terrible might have poor value but must have still learned stuff like language maybe has other knowledge unrelated to school. Killing them would be destroying that. Babies have no such value. So why not kill them if they are broken?

I was hoping you'd say human beings have rights, rather than saying that people have to earn their place among the non-murdered with valuable knowledge.

Suppose a child is born that is retarded, or has no legs, or will need medical treatment for life. Why not kill them, eat them (wasteful not to) and make another and do a better job with the new one?

What do you think of "Universal" health care (free at the point of need)? Good or bad? And why?

over 1 year ago

It's wealth redistribution. It takes money from some people, via taxes, and then hands out a smaller amount, with some people getting less than their taxes and some more. Meanwhile it adds government levels of inefficiency, overhead and incompetence to the healthcare industry.

Do you think we should actively work to reduce pollution?

over 1 year ago

I actively work to reduce lots of pollution. I want my trash in my trash can, not on my floor polluting my home.

But I don't clean as much as possible. I allow some mess, some trash, some dust. Not all anti-pollution efforts are worth the effort.

When you talk about "we", I worry you mean having the government tell people what to do, and lots of those activities will be inefficient.

People will deal with lots of pollution on their own. When the government steps in, what will change? It will make people deal with pollution they don't think is a good idea to deal with. It's fine if the government says I can't dump out my garbage can on my neighbor's lawn. But if government starts ordering me to do unpaid labor recycling, when i don't want to, or orders me to make my home meet someone else's standards, that's bad.

If you like to be treated X way, and someone else likes to be treated Y way, Golden Rule says to treat them X way. This is very dumb, unless you assume everyone is the same as you (all people want to be treated X way).

You said below that you think the Golden Rule (love your neighbor etc) is "Stupid, immoral and destructive." Can you elaborate as to why and how? How being nice to people is immoral or destructive is not obvious.

over 1 year ago

what about it?

What's your view on inclusive language?

So no helping the homeless, giving to charity, paying someone's bus fare if they've lost their purse, helping an old lady across the road?

over 1 year ago

capitalism helps the homeless by dramatically raising the standard of living of everyone. and by not raising housing prices via rent control, tons of building regulations, high property taxes, etc. and capitalism helps unskilled workers get jobs by not destroying jobs in various ways including minimum wage laws (which primarily hurt the least skilled workers)

if you want to help an old lady across the road, or pay someone's bus fair, i'm not going to stop you. i'm also not going to make you. (no one today is going to make you either, so i don't get the issue. voluntary today, voluntary under full capitalism) about charity in general, look, i'm doing these ask.fm questions as charity. i think this is a better way for me to help people than walking people across intersections. i'm better at this, i have comparative advantage at it.

there's nothing wrong with charity when

- it isn't a sacrifice. don't sacrifice yourself
  - you want to do it, voluntarily
  - it's a good use of resources. don't do charity just for the sake of charity. you should consider if it makes sense. don't spend $20 to benefit someone $5.
  - it's best if there are values involved for you, ways you can benefit. for example i give away ideas and answers and help people. but i gain value here too: it helps create a better world for me to live in, it helps me find interesting people to talk to, etc
  - don't just throw money at something like greenpeace or PETA or ron paul without knowing much about the issue. spend money on stuff where you know what you're doing, you know the topic and can argue why you're on the right side. don't do it to try to reduce some guilt you shouldn't feel or to impress some people.
- more could be said but that's a good start.

What would it take for you to do something good for someone else? ×

over 1 year ago

An explanation of how it's best FOR ME TOO. My interests don't conflict with his, rationally and considered in the longrun and big picture. So if it's not OPTIMAL for me, then it's a bad idea! But if an action is optimal for me, then frequently it's going to help others. I have done tons of things that help others a great deal, such as answer ask.fm questions for free, give out free blog posts, etc, etc. But I've liked doing these things, and if I didn't like it and they hurt me, then I'd never have done them out of sacrificial altruism.

Why is anti-semitism so popular

over 1 year ago

a big thing is hatred of the good for being the good another big thing is scape goats

another big thing is: why were various jews more successful than various non-jews? often DESPITE being a minority that ppl mistreated. where does jewish success come from?

well a lot of ppl think life and economics and stuff are zero sum games, so they figure jewish wealth comes at the expense of the rest of society.

and a lot of ppl deny they are morally inferior. which kinda makes sense in a way. who is gonna be keen to think they are morally inferior? (also some ppl just deny there is objective morality, with some similar results.) so the jews must have got ahead by something other than being morally better. so where does that lead you? well they must have cheated somehow, done something bad, done something immoral, etc and then there is this common belief that morality is actually a disadvantage. like you can't steal. stealing is immoral. so morality is like a penalty, and immoral ppl have advantage. so good non-jews don't get rich, but then jews are willing to break moral rules to get ahead, so jews succeed cuz they are evil.

another big part of the issue is anti-semitism and anti-americanism have a lot in common and are related. a lot of ppl have a problem with success and morality and stuff like that.

another thing people do is they get really mad if you CLAIM to be good or moral. they don't like u thinking you're superior. America has said it's superior. not everyone, but plenty of Americans think that, it's a well known opinion. i'll be happy to admit to that. I think America is the greatest country. but if u claim to be good, ppl get pissed off and hold you to a higher standard or even a double standard, and try to tear you down, and dislike your "arrogance". jews totally get held to a higher standard. they kinda brag less than Americans but i think ppl just read bragging and claims to be good into their actions and success, even if they say it less. also, if being a jew wasn't so great, why not just assimilate into your host country? insisting on staying a jew, despite being mistreated, is kinda saying you think it's good and important and valuable.

Why & how do a few people (like you mentioned Ayn Rand) manage to avoid getting fucked up as kids and sucking for the rest of life? ×

over 1 year ago

No one knows.

We know a lot about how to stop hurting kid (TCS). We don't know much about why some people, seemingly at random, survive non-TCS childhoods.

Humans are really powerful and awesome, so it's hard to utterly destroy them with 100% reliability. It's like Rand said: John Galt is just a normal man. In other words, everyone is a potential John Galt, that's how awesome a human being is. Static memes and stuff are powerful enough to destroy that almost always but a few slip through the cracks.

(Of the ones who slip through the cracks, most perish in obscurity. They are unwanted by most people, don't fit in, etc.)

over 1 year ago

Haven't used. Looks very legit. Real lisp with real macros and real emphasis on functional programming.

Could improve PR:

http://clojure.org/functional\_programming

> Clojure supports arity overloading in a single function object, self-reference, and variable-arity functions using &:

"arity overloading" and "variable-arity functions" may be good phrases for communicating to me, but I suspect they are bad phrases for communicating to most Java programmers.

And "self-reference" is kind of confusing here due to not clearly specifying the context. What they mean is when defining a function you can reference the function you are currently defining, kind of like in OOP in various languages you can reference "self" in the "init" method of an object.

(BTW these particular points I just discussed are not worth bragging about in the first place.)

And the Clojure website does stuff like talk about details of Erlang and concurrency fairly near the front, without having all that much explanation for people who aren't that advanced. I also don't imagine it has much success communicating to people without any lisp or similar background.

So I don't think Clojure is going to convert the world to better programming practices, but it seems like a pretty good idea.

Why didn't atlas shrugged convert the country in six weeks?

over 1 year ago

Communication is hard.

<http://fallibleideas.com/communication-is-hard>

And people suck at paths forward.

<http://fallibleideas.com/paths-forward>

A lot. Seriously a lot. People won't have discussions to rationally resolve conflicts of ideas. They just give up or don't know how. And they won't read how.

They won't discuss whatever topic like econ, altruism, epistemology, etc. But then on top of that, they won't discuss their attitude to discussion itself. So then you're stuck, you're at an impasse, error correction is blocked.

Also everyone gets their minds raped as kids. (i hope you can swear on here, let's find out). by their parents and teachers especially. so there's that. damn static memes. see the 2 meme chapters in Bol for general details of how meme stuff works. <http://beginningofinfinity.com> people mistreat kids so much. it's really awful. and people(the kids) get so fucked up trying to cope. so that kinda covers everyone so everyone sucks. except Ayn Rand. rare exceptions.

i like some of Rand's comments about these issues. like, not only do we have this situation but then everyone wants to help trees and ducks and poors and blacks and dumb and anyone all sorts of irresponsible victim groups and stuff, instead of helping the best people be great. so that really doesn't help with the cause of there being good rational people in the world. I'll end with a Rand quote from Return of the Primitive [uppercase emphasis is mine]:

... Where are America's young fighters for ideas, the rebels against conformity to the gutter—the young men of “inexplicable personal alchemy,” the independent minds dedicated to the supremacy of truth?

With very rare exceptions, they are perishing in silence, unknown and unnoticed. Consciously or subconsciously, philosophically and psychologically, it is against them that the cult of irrationality—i.e., our entire academic and cultural Establishment—is directed.

They perish gradually, giving up, extinguishing their minds before they have a chance to grasp the nature of the evil they are facing. In lonely agony, they go from confident eagerness to bewilderment to indignation to resignation—to obscurity. And while their elders putter about, conserving redwood forests and building sanctuaries for mallard ducks, nobody notices those youths as they drop out of sight one by one, like sparks vanishing in limitless black space; NOBODY BUILDS SANCTUARIES FOR THE BEST OF THE HUMAN SPECIES.

So will the young Russian rebels perish spiritually—if they survive their jail terms physically. How long can a man preserve his sacred fire if he knows that jail is the reward for loyalty to reason? No longer than he can preserve it if he is taught that that loyalty is irrelevant—as he is taught both in the East and in the West. There are exceptions who will hold out, no matter what the circumstances. But these are exceptions that mankind has no right to expect.

Do you think Mises was a utilitarian?

over 1 year ago

<http://mises.org/library/defense-misess-utilitarianism>

> What many libertarians mean when they denounce "utilitarianism" is vitally different from what Mises meant by the term. For example, there is a strand of utilitarianism that attempts to "measure" utility, and use utility measurements to decide ethical and political issues. Many libertarians refer to the fallacy of this approach when attempting to refute "utilitarianism."

> But nothing could be further from Mises's utilitarianism than this doctrine. Indeed Mises himself was, from very early on in his career, in the forefront of refuting the very notion of measurable utility. Utility, he demonstrated, was a purely ordinal matter of ranking, and could never be a cardinal magnitude.

that article goes on to praise and discuss Rothbard, so i stopped reading.

i haven't read every word of Mises but don't recall him being a utilitarian offhand, and him being rly dumb sounds memorable.

the quotes above explain how people could think he was a utilitarian even if he wasn't. people could also be confused cuz capitalism benefits everyone. but that's not the whole issue. i don't think Mises' writing about social cooperation indicates utilitarianism, but i see how some people would misunderstand.

the string "utilitarian" appears on 16 pages of Human Action. some excerpts:

> Many economists, among them Adam Smith and Bastiat, believed in God. Hence they admired in the facts they had discovered the providential care of "the great Director of Nature." Atheist critics blame them for this attitude. However, these critics fail to realize that to sneer at the references to the "invisible hand" does not invalidate the essential teachings of the rationalist and utilitarian social philosophy.

this looks pretty positive on "utilitarian social philosophy" but doesn't fully clarify, substantively, what that consists of. if it means stuff such as capitalism, not breaking windows, the social cooperation caused by capitalism, etc, that seems fine and i just wouldn't use Mises' choice of words myself. Mises finishes that section of text (it's a footnote) with:

> One must comprehend that the alternative is this: Either association is a human process because it best serves the aims of the individuals concerned and the individuals themselves have the ability to realize the advantages they derive from their adjustment to life in social cooperation. Or a superior being enjoins upon reluctant men subordination to the law and to the social authorities. It is of minor importance whether one calls this supreme being God, Weltgeist, Destiny, History, Wotan, or Productive Forces and what title one assigns to its apostles, the dictators.

once you read the whole thing, i don't think you can take this as meaning he's a utilitarian. but i can easily imagine how someone would misread it. really this is advocating individualism etc

there is a 3000 char limit on answers, so i'm stopping here :(

tl;dr: no.

everyone seems to think "no" and is overly upset they can't formally prove it. i don't know a ton about it.

What epistemological breakthroughs are necessary for us to develop AGI?

maybe start by figuring out how to formalize the evaluation of criticism. when there is a criticism, what you really actually have is 2 conflicting ideas. how do you figure out if one is a criticism of the other, which is right, how to resolve this situation? we know a bunch about this in terms of english philosophy, and how to do it using creativity. but not how to formalize it and write it in pseudo-code or formal logic or math notation.

for some non-formal thoughts on how this works <http://curi.us/1595-rationally-resolving-conflicts-of-ideas>
