

SS: curi, you're about as a good character judge as Ask Yourself

JJ: i disagree

SS: But in general, from what I can tell, curi has problems relating with other people

J: i have seen curi engage patiently with hostile people way beyond the point at which i would have given up

SS: Does patient mean good at relating?

Someone can be both calm and not understanding

Comment: patience is a relevant skill to relating/understanding. if curi is world class at a relevant skill, it doesn't logically prove he's good at relating/understanding, but it clashes some with the view that he's below AY, who is gutter tier JJ: patience is required to understand other people when there is a gap in perspective

SS: Even if it was required it wouldn't make it sufficient

Comment: J never confused necessary and sufficient conditions. His point in bringing up his perspective on curi's patience was to indicate a contrary perspective, not present a self-contained logical refutation of anything SS had said. SS is strawmanning the meaning and purpose of what J said instead of e.g. asking for concrete examples of ET being patient or other examples which he might find more persuasive.
